I learned that courage was not the absence of fear, but the triumph over it. The brave man is not he who does not feel afraid, but he who conquers that fear. Nelson Mandela

Well my friends this is it, my favorite time of year, spending quality time with loved ones, celebrating holidays and the opportunity to start a new year full of hopes and dreams achievable. For some, 2013 was a year to forget and for others the best year of their life. Whichever end of the spectrum you are, remember if you are reading this newsletter, it's a day to celebrate life. For those who are hurting and struggling, give thanks because a new day is on the horizon. Stay focused, be positive, surround yourself with positive people and demand the best out of yourself. When you awake every morning, set the tone for the day by allowing the freedom of love and positive thoughts to embrace you. Do not allow what happened yesterday to stop your happiness today. Remember, you start everyday with a clean slate full of promise and whatever you make it. If you want change, change your mindset by speaking it into existence then follow it with actions to succeed. The lives we lead do not always lend time for inner reflection. We're so busy that we don't make space for love. We don't really examine and throw ourselves into this busyness so deeply that we don't take the time to pause for even a Sabbath, if you will. Everything else in creation has a Sabbath—a winter, a season of not being fruitful. Look at fruit trees: They give up the winter for the spring. So the same applies to us. I say give ourselves a chance to heal, restore, reflect and really find our internal heartbeat. It is time to find your purpose. 2014 will be your year of triumph if you take time to invest in yourself and be thankful God has allowed you to see another day. Happy New Year! And go get them!

"Respiratory Therapy is new to my country and the need for it is only understood by a few members of the medical fraternity.
